

Meeting Summary

Summary:

Summary:

- John Dunn has a line on this one which talked of a man who was discouraged . if communication can be used to motivate people it can also discourage people . but we are being open to the possibility of language of communication being used to discourage people but looking at it in the positive side .

Key Decisions:

- [Placeholder: requires deeper semantic analysis]

Action Items:

- [Placeholder: needs NLP-based role/action detection]

Action Items:

Decisions:

Transcript:

Like when you say, especially when your parents tell you to do something. When your parents say, or Leija, take this there. And then when you respond, if you try to respond, why me? Ay, that's a different story now. Or if you say, later, that will be over-rationalized. What you might do is, you stand up, pick something up, and bring it somewhere where it was supposed to be brought. So that the conversation will not have to go any further. Because if you refuse, if you try to speak, it just might make things worse. See, the model, the Shannon Weaver model is not totally obsolete. It is still existing but just in some circumstances. But generally now, what we try to embrace is... The Transactional Model by Dean Barnlund. Questions regarding the models of communication? If there's none, we'll have this quick touch of the functions of communication. We'll also have a separate model for the functions in terms of its in-depth discussion. But let's try to just go over them in a touch. The functions of communication, there are five. To start communications, first function is to set control. And that is to regulate behavior or to control behavior. Not just behavior but also words. Communication tries to set a filter of what we can do and what we can say and show. Communication is also meant for social interaction. Communication helps create social interactions among people. It allows us to develop social relationships. It makes us think that we are not alone in this world and so we are supported. to converse and talk with others we are supposed to interact with other people in fact john dunn has a line on this one he created a line which talked of a man uh john dunn was actually the one who has been quoted for the line no man is an island because of the context of social interaction another function of communication it is meant to help motivate people encourage them and in the same way I'm sorry not in the same way in its contrast if communication can be used to motivate people it can also be used to discourage people but we are looking at it in the positive side but we are being open to the possibility of language of communication being used to discourage people but looking at it on a positive note generally it is supposed to be meant for purpose purposes of communication for purposes of motivation communication for motivation purposes just last sunday i went with a i went to a dinner with a friend who talked to me of a problem of how communication ended with him being discouraged there was a talk that this friend of mine had with a personnel a person of a higher position and that friend of mine got discouraged in that conversation when that with that person of authority is in that position to encourage people what happened was that the conversation ended with my friend being discouraged next function of communication for emotional expression communication helps facilitate our expression of feelings and emotions how will this work through our words to the words that we say to the things that we do to the things that to what our bodies to what our body performs, emotions and feelings can come out. Lastly, communication is also meant for information dissemination. So much can be relayed, information can be conveyed through communication. Even if you do not converse with others, even with just your own self, you are relaying information. When you read from a source, that is communication. The author of that book... The author of that source sharing information to you, even if you do not relay that information to others, you are already sharing information, but just to yourself. And those are the five functions of communication. Before I proceed to the context on intercultural communication, I'd like to bring up once again the four macro skills of communication. There are now five. more than five